Gregory Price Grieve is Professor and Head of the Department of Religious Studies at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Grieve graduated from the University of Chicago's Divinity school, and studies at the intersection of Asian religions and popular culture. He specializes in digital religion, particularly the emerging field of religion and video games, and his current research uses video games to explore the category of evil in contemporary life. Along with his academic career Grieve graduated with a degree in film from San Francisco State University, and paints, makes films, and tinkers with conceptual art. He has shown work both nationally and internationally, and in September 2020, had a retrospective of his artworks as part of Flick - Experimental Film Festival 2020.
